January 2022 Dairy Market Watch Available from Katelyn Walley-Stoll

Looking ahead to 2022, we should see much higher milk prices. With slower than expected milk production increases, a strong export market, and high dairy product prices, we could see Class III prices above $20 for the entire year's average. Farms should still explore risk management and business planning options to balance the high input prices expected for 2022.

NY Wage Board Vote Supports Gradually Lowering the Farmworker Overtime Threshold to 40 Hours Per Week

On Friday, January 28th after several hearings with overwhelming testimony from many concerned parties, business owners, and employees, the NY Wage Board has passed three motions affecting NY Overtime Laws. While the vote was split, the motions will move forward to a final report which will be shared with the NYS Commissioner of Labor and the NY Governor.

Klebsiella mastitis - More than just another gram-negative - PRO-DAIRY

Klebsiella is becoming a more commonly isolated mastitis-causing organism on dairy farms across the Northeast. In this article from PRO-DAIRY, Dr. Paul Virkler highlights how to identify if this is a problem at your farm, risk factors, and how to prevent this microorganism to affect your cows.

The Pros and Cons of Seeding Pasture with Big Box or Garden Supply Store Mixes

This year, pasture seed will be in short supply. However, it's not a good idea to plant a mix that you happen across at your local big box or garden supply store. This article shares why.

Selling Eggs? Here's What you Need to Know

As eggs are prepared, processed, and packaged for sale, there are some safety considerations and state regulations that need to be kept in mind, even if your flock has fewer than 3,000 hens!
